FAQs

Is this for new or existing staff members?

Both. This course works to both upskill longstanding employees and for new hires joining the team.

What kind of time commitment is required?

An apprentice must spend 20% of their time undertaking off the job training. This could include all naturally arising learning opportunities at work, tutor support time, independent study time, participation in conferences and other activity. The dedicated trainer or ILE representative will be able to give more details.

Am I eligible for this course?

An apprentice has to work 50% or more in England. This qualification would represent 'significant new skills' (i.e. generally that the apprentice hasn't done this course before). There are other detailed requirements which will be discussed during the initial assessment and enrolment process.

What kind of assessment is involved?

A number of workplace observations will be undertaken to see you carrying out practical skills for your on programme assessment requirements. You will also complete online tests to achieve your knowledge and understanding of your practical skills. As part of your apprenticeship you will need to provide reflective accounts of your practice and any research evidence you have completed as part of your independent study. Your employer can also support the assessment process by providing witness testimonies as evidence of your competency.

How will I be assessed at the end?

There are two parts to the End Point Assessment process which are under exam conditions by an Independent End-point Assessor and will consist of a three hour practical exam accompanied by oral questioning. Don't worry if you haven't completed a formal assessment in a long time, our trainers will help you get ready for this every step of the way. The outcome of these assessments will be graded as a Fail, Pass or Distinction.
